Revered Sir,

Just these few lines to tell you how much I appreciate your lovely book "God's Moments". Even though I have not completed reading it yet, I cannot wait to tell you how much I have liked it. It is indeed a very fine collection and the poems written by you are lovely too. Such books are very rare now in these materialistic days; and if we could just try to realise and understand these wise words of these great ones; we are sure to have more happiness and peace than anything else.

Wishing you all success. With best wishes,

sincerely,

Sd. (Miss) Mehroo F. Dhabhar

GOD'S MOMENTS
OPINIONS CONTINUED.

The Leader Weekly (Sunday 7th August 1955)

The author, Mr. Ram B. Motwani, rightly thinks that it is unbecoming of human-beings to be engrossed all the time with worldly affairs and feels that it is impossible to flourish while prayer is neglected. He, therefore, suggests that one should set apart a few moments daily for prayer. 'In the great bustle of life', says the author, 'Nothing has given me any tranquillity of mind, except, communion with God during a few moments set apart every day.'

The book is divided into two parts, the former comprising the author's own compositions and the latter selected passages, poems and sayings - moral, philosophic as well as religious - from the writings and utterances of some of the master minds in all walks of life - Shakespeare, Coleridge, Tennyson, Socrates, Thomas A. Kempis, Confucius, Epictetus; Manu, Buddha, Rama Tirtha, Vivekananda, Nanak, Mira Bai, Tukarm, Kabir, Tulsidas; Besant, Mahatma Gandhi, Aurobindo, Keshub Chunder Sen, Tagore, and others.

To pick and choose pieces of prayer is no easy task as much depends on one's mental make up and preferences. Mr. Motwani has undoubtedly taken infinite pains to make the selection as varied and exhaustive as possible.

The book has been neatly brought out with an attractive cover depicting a figure sitting in prayer and is profusely illustrated with coloured plates on art paper of some of the great masters of thought. Considering the pains the author must have taken in producing it and the manner in which it has been presented, the author deserves all commendation. We have no doubt, an earnest perusal will bring peace and solace to many an aching heart and a dejected soul.
